BFI MARKS KEN LOACH'S 75TH BIRTHDAY WITH MAJOR PROJECT

In September 2011 the BFI will mark Ken Loach's 75th birthday, and 50-year career in film and television, with the most comprehensive retrospective ever of his work.

Ken Loach is a filmmaker with an outstanding international reputation both as a hugely talented craftsman and as a radical social and political commentator; the retrospective will explore the full range of Loach's films, television plays and documentaries. In full collaboration with Loach himself, this major BFI project incorporates a donation of Loach's collection to the BFI National Archive, a two-month BFI Southbank season and Mezzanine exhibition, regional tour, an education programme and Screenonline and Mediatheque programmes.

Ken Loach said, "I am of course delighted that the BFI will show all these films. However, I can't help feeling a little anxious about what will be revealed..."

Winner of the Palme d'or at Cannes 2006 for The Wind That Shakes the Barley Ken Loach is one of Britain's most celebrated and socially committed filmmakers. He began his career in media production 50 years ago when he joined BBC Television's drama department as a trainee director and went on to make ground-breaking television plays which are among the most important ever broadcast, such as Cathy Come Home or Up the Junction. His pioneering methods and gritty social realism had a huge influence on many filmmakers today including Shane Meadows, Paul Greengrass, Peter Mullan and many more. Loach's career is full of richly rewarding films, from compelling accounts of contemporary life such as Riff-Raff and Looking for Eric, as well as engaging political dramas such as Hidden Agenda or Land and Freedom. Above all these are passionate, well-crafted works of cinema with a universal appeal which transcend their geographical location.

The entire Ken Loach project is supported by a generous donation of £200,000 from the Esmée Fairbairn Foundation

Dawn Austwick, Chief Executive, said, "Esmée Fairbairn Foundation has for 50 years proudly supported civil society to achieve lasting change and improve people's lives. As part of our 50th birthday celebrations, we are pleased to be working with the British Film Institute to help preserve the unique works of Ken Loach, which provide us with invaluable insight into the social history of modern Britain."

SAVE THE CHILDREN FILM – WORLD PREMIERE

Ken Loach has never shied away from controversy in either his work or his personal political involvement. Several documentary projects have been effectively banned from transmission, including his 1969 film for Save the Children, which has only been viewed by a handful of BFI archivists in over 40 years. The film was mired in controversy and withdrawn under an injunction by Save the Children. The BFI are grateful to Save the Children for their permission to screen the film to launch the Ken Loach project at BFI Southbank on 1st September 2011.

THE KEN LOACH COLLECTION

Loach has donated to the BFI National Archive his entire archive of working papers including his emails. This precious hoard includes extensive production papers and working notes, casting lists, budgets, shooting schedules and annotated drafts and shooting scripts – even an Eric Cantona mask from Looking for Eric. A continuity script for Kes, full of on-location photographs, sits alongside scene breakdowns, early drafts and even notes on the process of training a kestrel. Correspondence to and from collaborators such as Jim Allen also includes letters of appreciation from fans as diverse as Alan Bennett and Neil Kinnock. The Channel 4 Duty log after a broadcast of Which Side are You On? illustrates the passionate response that Loach's work evokes, among those both for and against. The cataloguing of the collection is bound to uncover more fascinating insights into the work which will be of great interest to students in higher and further education, studying politics, history, or film as well as interested members of the public. Digital copies of key Loach documents chosen by BFI expert curators will be able to be consulted on the BFI website next year, thanks to the grant from the Esmée Fairbairn Foundation.

Heather Stewart, Creative Director, BFI said, "We are delighted to accept this extraordinarily generous gift by one of Britain's most internationally renowned and important filmmakers. Ken Loach has created an outstanding body of work and through this donation we will be able to preserve his films to the highest archival standards while offering a unique insight into his working methods."

BFI SOUTHBANK

This is the most comprehensive retrospective of the works of Ken Loach ever mounted covering his feature films, television and documentary work. Many of Loach's best known collaborators such as producer Rebecca O'Brien, editor Jonathan Morris, writer Paul Laverty and producer Tony Garnett will be taking part in a range of events and introduced screenings. Ken Loach himself will launch the season with a screening of the Save the Children film and will also introduce Land and Freedom (one of his personal favourites).

An exhibition of materials from the newly donated Ken Loach collection will be on show alongside other Loach items from the BFI's collections in a dedicated display in the Mezzanine gallery at BFI Southbank. Opens September 2011.

UK-WIDE/REGIONAL SCREENINGS

The landmark retrospective of Ken Loach's work for film and television screened at BFI Southbank in September and October will also have selected screenings in Bath, Sheffield, Belfast and Glasgow. Titles already confirmed include Carla's Song, My Name is Joe, Sweet Sixteen, and Ae Fond Kiss which will screen at the Glasgow Film Theatre. Kes, The Wind That Shakes the Barley, Hidden Agenda and My Name is Joe screen at Queen's Film Theatre, Belfast. Kes, The Game Keeper, The Price of Coal, Looks and Smiles and The Wind That Shakes the Barley will screen at Sheffield Showroom.

Each venue will also have a programme of educational events and special guests.

SCREENONLINE

The BFI's online guide to British film and television (www.screenonline.org.uk) will present a thorough, in-depth account of Loach's work in film, television and documentary, as well as two new short films about Ken Loach and some of his key collaborators: Loach: The TV Years has producer Tony Garnett and writer Nell Dunn recalling their work on The Wednesday Play; while a focus on Sweet Sixteen will explore Loach's unique aesthetic and collaborative approach, with cinematographer Barry Ackroyd, long-time editor Jonathan Morris and actor Martin Compston.

MEDIATHEQUE

An expansive retrospective of Ken Loach's film and television work will be available to view for free at the BFI Mediatheques in London (BFI Southbank), Derby (QUAD centre for art and film), Cambridge (Central Library), Newcastle upon Tyne (Discovery Museum), and Wrexham (Main Library).

This major addition to the Mediatheque's collections will encompass complete feature films and TV programmes from the 1960s to today, including titles unavailable to the public for many years

EDUCATION

New materials and on-line guides for teachers will be produced by BFI Education for those involved in teaching about the films of Ken Loach.

A series of nationwide competitions will be run:

- Should British filmmakers be more independent?
A young journalist competition in association with Sight & Sound magazine (16 – 25yr olds)
- Between the Lines A writing competition encouraging young people inspired by Loach's challenging approach, to champion alternative stories which challenge the establishment (10 – 25yrs in three age bands).

Events for schools will take place at BFI Southbank and at regional venues.

Film: 21st Century Literacy partners - All partners are supporting the Loach Project and the Between the Lines competition. FILMCLUB are promoting the competition to schools UK-wide and curating two special seasons of films, with accompanying online teaching guides:

- 10 films directed by Loach, showcasing why his work connects for children and young people.
- 'Tell It Like It Is': 10 British films which share Loach's sensibility and humour

Film Education will organise during National Schools Film Week free screenings, UK-wide, of Route Irish and an on-line resource for teachers; and will promote the competition to schools UK-wide. First Light are managing the competition.

BFI SOUTHBANK RETROSPECTIVE IN FULL

Ken Loach season notes by John Hill, author of Ken Loach: The Politics of Film and Television

'Ken Loach is a national treasure', one critic has observed. 'It just seems that the nation that produced him is not always keen to treasure him'. On the one hand, Loach is the most distinguished English filmmaker at work today, responsible for some of the most memorable British film and television productions of the last five decades. On the other hand, he has never become a fully accepted member of the political or film establishments and has retained a certain 'outsider' status by virtue of his relish for work that provokes controversy and arouses debate. Loach has consistently chosen to use television and film as a way of drawing attention to the political problems faced by 'ordinary' people at the bottom of the social ladder. He has also sought to represent them in a way that he regards as faithful to the actuality of their lives. Thus while initially influenced by the anti-naturalistic polemics of Troy Kennedy Martin, Loach since evolved a 'realist' style characterised by location shooting, a mix of professional and non-professional actors and a pared-down observational mode of camerawork that maintains a respectful distance from the action. However, while it is relatively easy to identify distinctive 'Loachian' themes and stylistic traits, Loach has always resisted the label of 'auteur' on the grounds that filmmaking is a collective endeavour. This has meant that he has sought to maintain regular relationships with trusted collaborators, including writers Jim Allen, Barry Hines and Paul Laverty, producers Tony Garnett, Sally Hibbin and Rebecca O'Brien, cameramen Chris Menges and Barry Ackroyd, editors Roy Watts and Jonathan Morris, designers Martin Johnson and Fergus Clegg and composer George Fenton. So, while the current season provides an opportunity to trace the development of Loach's work over 45 years, it is also a record of the creative partnerships that have enabled one of British cinema's most distinctive, politically radical filmmakers to continue to be seen and heard.

Save the Children Film: World Premiere

A special opportunity to see a film never before screened. In 1969 Kestrel Films were commissioned by Save the Children to make a film portraying its work, to mark the 50th anniversary of the charity and intended for broadcast on London Weekend Television. Already a fiercely political filmmaker, Loach opened the film with a quotation from Friedrich Engels, and went on to construct a film that explored the politics of race, class and charity in capitalist society. At that time Save the Children representatives felt the film subverted their aims. The ensuing dispute meant that Save the Children did not agree to a public screening of the work, which resulted in its preservation within the BFI National Archive.

Forty years later we are delighted to show the film for the first time ever, in partnership with Save the Children, to launch the BFI's Loach retrospective. Produced by Tony Garnett and shot by Chris Menges, this is a unique slice of British social and cinematic history.

Followed by a discussion with Ken Loach and representatives of Save the Children and the BFI National Archive.

The Politics of Documentary

When Ken Loach sought to expose the corruption and concealed agendas of the political establishment through a series of documentaries produced for television in the 1980s, he found himself silenced and marginalised. Exploring controversial questions of political bias and censorship in the British media, then and now, we are delighted to welcome Ken Loach and guests to a discussion chaired by Jonathan Derbyshire, Culture Editor of the New Statesman.

Up the Junction

BBC 1965. With Geraldine Sherman, Carol White, Vickery Turner, Tony Selby. 72min

Described by producer Tony Garnett as 'not a play, a documentary, or a musical' but 'all of these at once', Up the Junction was a groundbreaking production of Nell Dunn's novel of working-class life. Although hated by Mary Whitehouse for its treatment of a backstreet abortion, the production's energetic female cast and exuberant sense of artistic experiment make it compelling.

Plus Auditions (1980, 60min): A rarely-seen documentary that follows three dancers searching for work following the end of the summer at Great Yarmouth.

Cathy Come Home

BBC 1966. With Ray Brooks. 77min

Arguably the most famous drama ever made for British television, Cathy Come Home's heartbreaking tale of family break-up in the face of homelessness pricked the conscience of the nation. While there were complaints about the mixing of drama and documentary, only the most stony-hearted could fail to be moved by Carol White's luminous performance as the luckless 'everywoman', Cathy.

Also screens during Crisis event

Sat 3 Sept 16:10 NFT2

Poor Cow

UK 1967. 101min. 15

Loach returned to a Nell Dunn novel for his first feature film and his first work to be shot in colour. Starring Carol White and Terence Stamp as an ill-starred romantic couple, it also proved to be a surprise commercial hit.

Although Loach has since expressed reservations about its 'modishness', it remains a key film of the 1960s for its sardonic take on the 'swinging sixties' and happy-go-lucky mixing of social observation and Godardian modernism.

The Golden Vision

BBC 1968. With Ken Jones, Bill Dean, Neville Smith. 60min

Focusing on a group of dedicated Everton fans, The Golden Vision combines fictional scenes (performed by a sparkling cast of local club entertainers) with documentary material of Everton officials and players. One of Loach's most relaxed and straightforwardly enjoyable works. Plus After a Lifetime (ITV 1971, 71min): Reuniting many of the cast from The Golden Vision, Neville Smith's semi-autobiographical story mourns the loss of the revolutionary spirit of an earlier generation.

Kes

UK 1969. With Lynn Perrie, Freddie Fletcher, Colin Welland, Brian Glover. 112min. Digital PG

Arguably Loach's best-known work and regularly cited as one of the best British films of all time, Kes was the first of a series of collaborations with writer Barry Hines (and cinematographer Chris Menges). Dealing with a young Barnsley boy's rapport with a kestrel, the film was shot with a predominantly non-professional cast in a spare observational style. Newcomer David Bradley gives a fine performance as the schoolboy let down by the education system.

Family Life

UK 1971. With Bill Dean, Grace Cave, Malcolm Tierney. 108min. 15

A remake of David Mercer's In Two Minds, which Loach had previously made for The Wednesday Play series. Drawing on RD Laing's critique of the diagnosis and treatment of 'schizophrenia', the film charts – in an uncluttered observational style – the way in which an oppressive family structure and an unsympathetic medical establishment exacerbates, rather than 'cures', the 'illness' of the female lead, Janice (played with heartfelt conviction by newcomer Sandy Ratcliff).

Days of Hope

BBC 1975. With Paul Copley,

Pamela Brighton, Nikolas Simmonds, Alun Armstrong. 97min + 104min + 81min + 133min

Consisting of four television films dealing with the Great War through to the 1926 General Strike, Days of Hope represents something of a high-water mark for Loach in terms of scale of production, artistic achievement and political ambition. Despite the inevitable press denunciations of its 'left-wingery', it was left to Stephen Frears to point out that no British film 'made for cinema distribution' could compare 'in importance with Days of Hope'.

The Price of Coal

BBC 1977. Part One: Meet the People + Part Two: Back to Reality. With Bobby Knutt, Duggie Brown, Rita May, Jackie Shinn. Total 150min

Set in a Yorkshire coalmine, Part One of these two made-for-television films provides a wry observation of the absurdities surrounding the preparations for a royal visit while Part Two deals with a pit accident that leaves men trapped underground. Extracting excellent performances from a cast largely made up of local club entertainers and nonprofessionals, The Price of Coal is both a carefully observed drama of pit-head life and a moving plea for improvements in safety conditions

Black Jack

UK 1979. With Stephen Hirst, Louise Cooper, Jean Franval, Phil Askham. 110 min. Video. U
Loach's own adaptation of a children's novel by Leon Garfield, Black Jack is set in Yorkshire in the 18th century and tells the story of a young lad forced to go on the run with the criminal "Black Jack". Although relatively unloved at the time of its release, Black Jack has since been rediscovered and praised for its evocation of the period, distinctive visual style and folk music soundtrack.

The Gamekeeper

ITV 1980. With Phil Askham, Rita May, Andrew Grubb. 84min

Although made for ATV's Documentary department, and described at the time as a 'dramatised documentary', The Gamekeeper is, in fact, an adaptation of a novel by Barry Hines dealing with a year in the life of a gamekeeper on a country estate in South Yorkshire. An unusual piece for Loach insofar as it deals with rural life, its emphasis upon work and class relations links it firmly to his other films. Plus Which Side Are You On? (1985, 53min): Made during the coal dispute of 1984-5, and providing an invigorating documentary record of the 'stories, poems and experiences' inspired by the miners' fight against pit closures.

Fri 16 Sept 20:20 NFT2

Looks and Smiles

UK 1981. With Graham Green, Tony Pitts, Carolyn Nicholson. 104min. Video. 15

Scripted by Barry Hines, Looks and Smiles was partly conceived as a follow-up to Kes in which a schoolleaver embarks upon a search for his first job. Making it in the early years of Thatcherism, Loach later complained that the film was insufficiently critical of government policies. Nevertheless, beautifully shot in black and white by Chris Menges, the film is one of Loach's most visually arresting and quietly eloquent works.

Hidden Agenda

UK 1990. With Frances McDormand, Brian Cox, Brad Dourif, Mai Zetterling, Maurice Roeves. 108min. 15

Loosely based on John Stalker's enquiry into the alleged 'shoot to kill' policy in Northern Ireland in the early 1980s, this political thriller was denounced as a 'pro-IRA' film by Conservative MP Ivor Stanbrook when first shown at Cannes. The film itself, however, was not really about the IRA at all but how the actions of the British secret services can threaten civil rights and democratic accountability not only in Northern Ireland but in Britain as well.

Riff-Raff

UK 1991. With Emer McCourt, Jimmy Coleman. 96min. 15

Based on Bill Jesse's reminiscences of working on building sites, Riff-Raff signalled a return to familiar terrain for Loach following experiments with the European art film (Fatherland) and political thriller (Hidden Agenda). Bringing together a strong cast that included Robert Carlyle and Ricky Tomlinson, the film celebrates the humour and camaraderie of men forced to work in uncongenial conditions but also reveals how these become subject to strain in the face of unscrupulous employment practices

Raining Stones

UK 1993. With Bruce Jones, Julie Brown, Ricky Tomlinson. 91min. 15

Shot on the run-down Middleton estate in Manchester where writer Jim Allen had once lived, Raining Stones focuses on an unemployed man's descent into debt when faced with his daughter's forthcoming communion. Although some of Loach and Allen's admirers were surprised by the film's relatively sympathetic portrait of religion, the emphasis is upon mutual forms of support in the face of economic disadvantage rather than spiritual belief.

Tue 27 Sept 20:40 NFT2

Ladybird, Ladybird

UK 1994. With Vladimir Vega, Sandie Lavelle, Ray Winstone. 102min

Loosely based on a true story, Ladybird, Ladybird deals with the struggles of an unmarried mother to hold on to her various children in the face of bureaucratic interference. Although possessing clear similarities to Cathy Come Home, the film's central character Maggie, played with blistering intensity by Crissy Rock, is much less sympathetic than her famous predecessor, with the result that the meaning of her emotionally punishing tussles with the authorities becomes that much more complicated and unsettling.

Land and Freedom

UK-Spain-Germany 1995. With Ian Hart, Iciar Bollain, Rosana Pastor, Tom Gilroy. 109min. 15

Partly indebted to George Orwell's Homage to Catalonia, Land and Freedom tells the story of a young Liverpudlian who sets off to fight in the Spanish Civil War and becomes involved with the POUM, a quasi-Trotskyite group with roots in anarchism. Reclaiming the forgotten history of social revolution during the early years of the War, the film's partly improvised collectivisation scene is justifiably regarded as one of the high-points of modern political cinema.

Carla's Song UK-Germany-Spain 1996.

With Robert Carlyle, Oyanka Cabezas, Scott Glenn, Gary Lewis. 120min (Director's cut). 15

Loach's first collaboration with writer Paul Laverty (who had worked as a human rights lawyer in Nicaragua), Carla's Song tells the story of a Glaswegian bus-driver who follows a beautiful, but troubled, refugee back to her war-torn country. An uneven but emotionally powerful piece of historical polemicising that recalls the social experiments of the Sandinista revolution while reminding audiences of the brutality of the US-backed Contras.

My Name is Joe

UK-Germany-Spain-Italy-France 1998. With Louise Goodall, David McKay, Gary Lewis. 108 min. 15

Following his experience with Carla's Song, Loach returned to Glasgow to make the first of his unofficial 'Scottish trilogy'. Set in one of the poorest parts of the city, the film follows reformed alcoholic Joe as he tries to put his life back together and embarks on a tentative romance. Peter Mullan's emotionally charged performance as a man caught up in circumstances beyond his control earned him a well-deserved Best Actor Award at Cannes.

Bread and Roses

UK-Germany-Spain-France-Italy 2000.

With Pilar Padilla, Adrien Brody, Elpidia Carrillo, Jack McGee. 106min

(Director's cut). Video 15

An unexpected turn in Loach's career, this was the film that took him to Hollywood (and led to some unlikely stars looking for a part). This is not, however, Hollywood as we know it, and Loach's film presents an entirely unglamorous view of Los Angeles as seen from the perspective of cleaners (many of them Mexican immigrants) campaigning for union representation and better pay. Thu 22 Sept 20:40 NFT2; Sun 2 Oct 15:30 NFT3

The Navigators

UK-Germany-Spain 2001.

With Dean Andrews, Tom Craig,

Joe Duttine. 96min. 15

Based on the experiences of former railwayman Rob Dawber, The Navigators deals with a group of South Yorkshire rail-track workers coping with the consequences of railway privatisation. Filmed with local actors and comics, the film recalls The Price of Coal in the way in which it mixes comedy and pathos in order to reveal the high human cost of privatisation (and the lowering of safety standards that this entails).

Sweet Sixteen

UK 2002. With Annmarie Fulton, William Ruane, Michelle Coulter. 106min

The second of Loach and Laverty's Scottish films, Sweet Sixteen is set on a bleak estate in the former shipbuilding town of Greenock. Newcomer Martin Compston puts in a powerful performance as the teenager Liam who turns to drug-dealing in an effort to escape from a life of restricted opportunity and hardship. An angry attack on the waste of young lives created by unemployment and poverty.

Ae Fond Kiss

UK-Germany-Italy-Spain-France 2004. With Atta Yaqub, Eva Birthistle,

Shamshad Akhatar. 104min. 15

Partly conceived as a response to the changing attitudes towards Muslims in the wake of the events of 11 September 2001, Loach's third Scottish film deals with a romance between a second generation Glaswegian Asian, Casim, and an Irish-Catholic teacher, Roisin. Although the couple come under intense pressure to split up, the film explores the possibilities for forging new forms of social connection that go beyond the old certainties of cultural and ethnic identity.

The Wind That Shakes the Barley

UK-Ireland-Germany-Italy-Spain-Switzerland 2006. With Cillian Murphy,

Liam Cunningham, Padraic Delaney, Orla Fitzgerald. 127min. 15

Attacked by some critics in Britain for its unflattering portrait of the Black and Tans, Loach and Laverty's account of the Irish War of Independence and subsequent Civil War is primarily concerned with the struggle over different social and political visions for an independent Ireland. Despite a relatively poor reception in Britain, the film was a huge success in Ireland where its excavation of a submerged strand of Irish history encouraged something of a national debate.

It's a Free World

UK-Italy-Germany-Spain-Poland 2007. With Juliet Ellis, Leslaw Zurek. 96min. 15
Instead of a film dealing with 'victims', Loach and Lavery decided to explore 'the mindset' of those 'doing the exploiting' by focusing on the activities of a ruthless entrepreneur, Angie (played with great gusto by Kierston Wareing), involved in recruiting low-paid workers from Eastern Europe. Shot in an anonymous East London, It's a Free World memorably evokes a twilight world of free-market capitalism and disenfranchised migrant workers.

Looking for Eric

UK-France-Italy-Belgium-Spain 2009. With Steve Evets, Stephanie Bishop, Gerard Kearns. 116min. 15

A highly enjoyable comedy in which the former Manchester United forward Eric Cantona (playing 'lui-même') comes – in the form of an imaginary friend – to the rescue of down-on-his-luck postman Eric. Although critical of the way in which the 'people's game' has been hijacked by big business, Looking for Eric is primarily a celebration of the virtues of 'teamwork' and Loach's most upbeat film in years.

Mon 10 Oct 20:50 NFT2

Route Irish

UK-France-Italy-Belgium-Spain 2010. With John Bishop, Andrea Lowe, Trevor Williams. 109min. 15

A heady mix of conspiracy thriller, revenge drama and social commentary, Route Irish deals with a former soldier's search for an explanation for the death of his childhood friend in Baghdad. Although focused on the murky world of private military contractors, it is Mark Womack's powerful performance as the ex-soldier on the verge of a nervous breakdown that dominates the film as it moves towards a shocking and nihilistic conclusion.

Ken Loach retrospective

This major new addition to the Mediatheque's collections marks celebrated filmmaker Ken Loach's 75th birthday with an expansive retrospective of his hard-hitting work in film and television since the 1960s, including many previously unavailable titles. Launching across two months, the Mediatheque Ken Loach retrospective begins in September with television, from Loach's early work at the BBC directing episodes of Z Cars and The Wednesday Play through to 70s mini-series Days of Hope and the provocative non-fiction output of the 80s and 90s. This is followed in October by a survey of his big-screen filmmaking, with a raft of complete features and shorts to explore. Whether you're new to Loach or a longstanding aficionado, this collection – encompassing the familiar (Up the Junction, 1965) and the rarely seen (Looks and Smiles, 1981) – will offer unparalleled access to the work of British cinema's most outspoken and politically engaged iconoclast.
